

Ms. Moore

Fundamentals of Composition

Michael Huang

May 14th 2025

The Cherry Blossoms

In the spring, cherry blossoms quietly bloom and come into the crowd's view. Time indefinite in the year, under the blue sky, with the sunlight, the pinky-white little flowers group around the joint of every single branch decorating the whole tree. Light pink blending with the clean white, the petals envelop the dark red pistil.

Under the cherry blossoms, an unknown young man wandered around repetitively, endlessly. Exhausted, the young man bowed his head down, stared at the dark crunchy road bricks. He meandered purposelessly, just as if he lost his soul totally forever. He suddenly looked up at the bright blue sky, breathing deeply, hopelessly, as if he had lost the meaning of surviving. Dulled, there wasn't any sense of vitality in his two eyes, as if he had never caught sunlight before. He walked with one hand in his pants pocket, from the mid-noon till sunset. Mysterious, how much untold secrets were buried in his heart; hesitant, what is preventing him from expressing; sorrowful, these inner burdens crushed him down gradually. His life must be extremely tedious, that he can only meditate consistently to seek interest among his thoughts.

Plain, bland, waking up in the morning at 7:40, having a croissant sandwich as breakfast, taking the same quiet walk down the hallway to his class, reading the bunch of literature papers and completing his annotations, obeying the same daily schedule, his originally adventurous life gradually became tasteless. Wasting a great amount of time on the lackluster entertainment, he tried diverse ways arduously to make his life more meaningful and interesting.

A gust of wind blew over the branches, petals drifted down silently, covering the land with its pinkish pigment. Around him, people were delighted under the enchanting cherry blossoms. Some of them holding their phones upright and focusing on the exquisite bloom; some lying by the side of the tree bark, with their eyes closed, gradually immersing in the enriching spring sweetness; some with their first love, enjoying picnic, laughter light-hearted, affection honest and unguarded. The young man's pace was interrupted, he suddenly stopped and noticed the cherry blossoms. He kneeled down and mildly picked up one of the fallen petals. Instantly, he was enlightened. How many valuable memories had slipped over his daydreaming, the laughter he had with his friends while playing card games; the precious happiness during his trips to Europe with his family; the flipped moment when conversing insightfully about Renaissance with someone he liked during study hour. The petal gradually slipped away from his hands and landed on the ground. The blossoms continued falling, and beneath them, life still progressed, tender, fleeting, and unforgettable.